Pipeline info: [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] the PEPFAR pipeline is big. Most foreign assistance programs carry pipelines and large assistance programs like PEPFAR will have large pipelines. As of June 30, 2012, the latest data we have, PEPFAR was carrying a pipeline of undisbursed funds (funding that is available but has not gone out the door yet) of $6.7 billion. Of this amount, USAID-managed PEPFAR programs represent 62 percent of the overall pipeline. HHS is second comprising 27 percent of the pipeline. Why is the pipeline so big? Remember that PEPFAR receives over $5 billion per year in appropriations annually and there are delays in moving money to the field and then to implementers. Appropriations bills are always late and once an appropriations bill is passed OGAC runs a thorough and lengthy process to determine how to allocate these funds. It is natural that OGAC will carry over substantial funding from one fiscal year to the next. Even USAID’s own guidelines suggest that programs have 9-12 months of carryover to deal with such delays.

I tried to be as direct as possible. I hope this helps and I am happy to discuss further.

CONFIDENTIAL – note limited distribution.

SEE BELOW:

A few observations:

1. I would not be surprised if Raj already has shared a draft of this concept with others in the Executive Branch;
2. Gayle may already find the approach compelling but concerned about the accuracy of the data (which is the basis for considering the approach seriously);
3. We need to determine our collective thoughts. I will set a time to discuss.
